Mégalithes de Kerfourcher (Amis Bretons de Colombar)

Between megaliths and old hulls

This stage will allow us to discover some more megaliths at the place called Kerfourcher lost in the woods (ruined dolmens and menhir). We will then join the Blavet which forms with the Scorff the roadstead of Lorient that we will see. The path along the river will lead us to the medieval town of Hennebont and its minor basilica.

☞ Pont du Bonhomme (A)

Before the current bridge was built, the crossing of the Blavet River was done by means of a suspension bridge.

Built in 1903, it was in service until 1974. The bridge deck was demolished in the early 1980s. Only the stone piers remain.

The name of this bridge comes from the name of a rock located on the Kervignac side (the "roch ar boulom").

Two statues initially in polychrome oak are placed at the top of the piles: a Breton woman on one pile holds a snuffbox out to a Breton man on the other. They were replaced by casts in 1995.

From the bridge, we have a view of the bay of Lorient.

☞ Kerhervy Boat Graveyard (B)

In the Blavet de Kerhervy cove, in front of the ship cemetery, an outdoor theatre has been built. A theatre festival takes place there every year.
