

Champlemy to Prémery

France - Bourgogne-Franche-Comté

Église Saint-Marcel à Prémery (Amis de saint Colomban)

A stopover through the forests of Nivernais, take a break in Saint-Bonnot to discover the history of the church.

A short stage in kilometers but rich in its forest heritage.

With an afforestation rate of more than 30%, the Nièvre department now has the 1st oak grove in France. The forest has been an economic vector for centuries, from the supply of carpentry wood to the royal navy of Louis XIV, to the supply of firewood to Paris for four centuries, to the large industrial carbonization units of the 20th century.

The heritage of Prémery will surprise you with its diversity.

Champlemy Castle (A)

You can access the ruins of the castle from the accessible path on the main street at the bus stop.

The castle is built near an old Roman road, a place of exchanges, passages and invasions over the centuries. In 1364, Marguerite de Fontenay owned the lands of Champlemy and built the first castle. In the 15th century, the building was designed by the Bureau de La Rivière, Charles VI's first chamberlain. In the 17th century, the castle became the property of Anne de La Guiche, wife of Henri de Schomberg, Marshal of France. In the 19th century, it changed ownership several times and ended up abandoned during the 20th century.

In 2017 the municipality became the owner of the site, an association for the protection of the site will have the task of finding the funds to start the restoration of the castle.

Church of Our Lady of the Assumption in Saint-Bonnot (B)

In Saint-Bonnot, church of the 19th century (1826) dedicated to Our Lady of the Assumption, entirely rebuilt in the 19th century to replace the old ruined sanctuary dating from 1155. The bell tower has two bells. Neo-Romanesque style construction. The natural son of the Count of Osmond, lord of the Vénérerie, and Sarah Bernhardt would rest in a crypt of the church (this one owned the Château de la Vénérerie, then a meeting place for memorable hunting). The church has a wooden central heating system, built of red brick placed under the sacristy.

📷 Saint-Marcel collegiate church in Préméry (D)

The collegiate church of Saint-Marcel in Premery, founded in 1196, includes nine canons. The facade of the church dates from the 14th century. The bedside is with seven cut sides. The church is rectangular in plan, with the bell tower projecting. The 14th century facade is flanked by a staircase turret. The pyramidal roof of the bell tower is covered with slates. The south portal is dated from the 13th century, the altar contains, in addition to the relics of Saint Marcel, those of Saint Savinian and Saint Potentian (apostles and martyrs of Senegalese), and the magnificent 16th century Pietà retains some traces of polychromy. A superb canopy of the Passion dated from the 15th century. An 11th century capital serves as a pedestal for the 16th century cast iron holy water font.
