Pouilly-sur-Loire avec ses vignes de Pouilly-Fumé (Amis de saint Colomban)

A whole concentration of heritage sites that accompany you in the Loire Valley. They deserve to devote some time to them and for this long stage we invite you to take a break, after 16 km, in Pouilly-sur-Loire. Two days devoted to this stage are desirable.

First contact with the famous vineyard of the banks of the Loire in Pouilly-sur-Loire and Sancerre on the left bank of the river. The visit of Sancerre and Saint-Satur deserves a full day which is not scheduled in the Via Columbani. The landscapes of the left bank of the Loire accompany you throughout your walk.

The Loire Valley Nature Reserve welcomes you on certain parts of your journey. Let yourself be surprised by the landscapes in the vineyards, the castles (private properties), and the churches in the villages.

🏰 Tracy Castle in Tracy-sur-Loire (F)

The castle of Tracy stands on a rocky spur overlooking the Loire River, on a commune that bears its name. A very beautiful renaissance portal decorates the facade with a sober elegance. A medieval keep dominates the high slate roofs.

In 1586, François Stutt married Françoise de Bar who brought him the lordship of Tracy as a gift. Through their marriage, the descendants of the Count of Assay and his younger son, François Stutt, current owners of the Château de Tracy, reunited the two branches of the same family that had been separated for nearly four centuries.

The current family business was recreated by the Count and Countess Alain d'Estutt d'Assay in 1952, is led by Juliette d'Assay, the last of their four children.

The family produces wines that are as faithful as possible to the terroirs exploited by the Château de Tracy, by practising natural viticulture and vinification, favourable to the expression of the Sauvignon grape.

Private estate, cannot be visited.

Sainte-Brigitte Chapel in Villechaud, Cosne-sur-Loire (G)

Guy de Mello, bishop of Auxerre from 1247 to 1269, had an oratory built on the ruins of the castle of the bishops of Auxerre. The present chapel, which partly reuses walls that seem to date from the 15th century, was built to serve as a temporary place of worship after the collapse of the bell tower of St-Aignan in Cosne-sur-Loire in 1738. It was consecrated on December 6, 1742 in Ste-Brigitte de Suède, where St-Nicolas was also venerated.

The east side of the Sainte-Brigitte Chapel preserves the traces of several walled openings.

The building reuses part of the walls of the former castle of the Bishops of Auxerre, which was built on this site, it will be in ruins at the end of the Hundred Years War.

Saint-Agnan Church at Cosne-sur-Loire (H)

The church of Saint-Agnan (or Saint-Aignan, Bishop of Orléans) was built on the site of a 6th century oratory dedicated to Saint Front. Later, at the instigation of Hugues, abbot of Cluny, the Benedictines built the Saint-Agnan church which was completed at the beginning of the 12th century. The Romanesque portal, well preserved thanks to the bell-tower-porch, the apse, the chevet and some wall elements remain from this period.

Fire and collapses destroyed part of the church, which was rebuilt in the 18th century.

📷 Saint-Jacques Church at Cosne-sur-Loire (I)

The church of St Jacques was built in the 15th century on the site of the collegiate church of St Laurent, built in the 11th century by Hugues de Châlon, Bishop of Auxerre.

In Gothic style, the outside facade presents, at the top of the gable, a curious openwork square platform, accessible from the bell tower. It is attributed a role of watchtower.

The interior consists of a four-bay nave flanked by aisles and followed by a chancel ending in a five-sided chevet. Of note is a stained glass window of Saint Nicolas (patron saint of bargemen), the lower part of which represents the flooding of the Loire in 1846.

Beneath the baptismal font, a crypt has been discovered, the vault of which is decorated with a 15th century fresco representing Christ, surrounded by the attributes of the four evangelists. In his left hand he holds a globe surmounted by a cross and he blesses with his right hand.
